In 2010 Chris was asked to replace the current lead vocalist and front man with the Central Coast RocknRoll “hobby band” The Rebel Rousers. Within 12 months the band more than doubled its work rate. He enjoyed great success as lead vocalist, front man, promotions, booking and marketing manager, performing at venues from Coffs Harbour in northern NSW through Nambucca Heads, Port Macquarie, Newcastle, The Central Coast, to Sydney, Albury in the South and Tamworth in the west.

However, there was an element in the band that wanted their music to go in a different direction. Sadly the band boss agreed, so after putting the band on the map, Chris left.

The Rebel Rousers faded away and two years later disappeared off the entertainment map completely.

In 2014 Chris was asked to again replace a front man and lead vocalist, this time in the Sydney based, well established Midnight Drifters RocknRoll band. Chris’ talents, vocal dynamics, experience, network of contacts, enthusiasm, passion and overall input into this band saw its repertoire double, friend’s base double, work load and popularity double, public profile become more dominant and once again travelling all over the state and interstate playing venues and festivals, cruise ships and everything and anything in between until the present day in 2019.

The Midnight Drifters.

Chris has an incredible passion for performing. He loves his audience and believes they are the most important people in the business.
